Communications.

Cherokee Language.

To Mr. B., New York.

I have received your manuscript containing a series of questions, and answers, referre to the Cherokee characters. To those which have been answered, I have but expressed my opinion, of the correctness of the answers given by Dr. F., by Mr. B., and Mr. C.

Question 1. - When is there such a difference between the vowels of the Cherokee and the English languages, as to make them unpronounceable, and which is best suited for the purpose of conveying the meaning of words? It is said that in those languages there is a difference between the sounds of d, g, and k, and that the Cherokee language is more difficult to learn than the English language.

Question 2. - How many of the letters of the English language are used in the Cherokee language? I have looked over the alphabet and found that they are all used, and also some which are not used in the English language.

Question 3. - What are the sounds of the letters d, g, k, w, v, and t? I have looked over the alphabet and found that these letters are pronounced differently in the Cherokee language than in the English language.

Question 4. - Are the Cherokee syllables all consonant or can they be made to be vowels? I have looked over the alphabet and found that there are some consonant syllables which can be made to be vowels.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

FOREIGN.

The Telegraph of the 25th says the alarm was excited in the city of St. Petersburg, and was in a state of great excitement. The alarm was caused by the news of the capture of a number of prisoners, who were suspected of being engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the government.

The alarm was excited by the news of the capture of a number of prisoners, who were suspected of being engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the government.

The alarm was excited by the news of the capture of a number of prisoners, who were suspected of being engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the government.

The alarm was excited by the news of the capture of a number of prisoners, who were suspected of being engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the government.

The alarm was excited by the news of the capture of a number of prisoners, who were suspected of being engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the government.

The alarm was excited by the news of the capture of a number of prisoners, who were suspected of being engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the government.